

Why join AIC as an Associate Member?

The Agricultural Industries Confederation (AIC) is the UK's lead trade association for the agricultural supply industry and represents businesses in key sectors within the supply chains that feed the nation. Formed in October 2003 by a merger of three trade associations, today AIC has over 230 Members in the agri-supply trade and represents £17.8 billion turnover at farmgate.

AIC works on behalf of its Members by lobbying policymakers and stakeholders, delivering information, providing trade assurance schemes, and offering technical support.

Associate Membership is available to companies or organisations operating in the wider agricultural supply industry and which do not qualify for Full Membership.

Associate Member – Key Benefits

1 Accessing the latest agri-food policy information

AIC's policy team consists of cross-sector and sector specialists who offer valuable industry insights which matter to your business. Email and online Member briefings sent from our team of policy experts provide timely information on key agri-inputs and agri-food policy matters that AIC is working on for the benefit of Members.

2 Assessing the impact of key policies on your business

With agriculture and food production policy in a continually evolving state, Associate Members can access AIC resources which help your organisation keep pace with continually changing legislation and standards.

3 Being part of an agri-food network

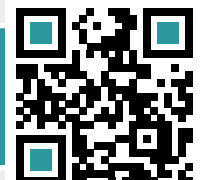

AIC has a wide range of Members and stakeholders who attend virtual briefing sessions and live in-person events, making for ideal opportunities to network and open doors for collaboration.

4 Planning for the future

By analysing policy decisions and better understanding legislative changes, your business can plan for the future and allocate investment with greater certainty.
